In his monumental The End for Which God Created the World (1765), Jonathan Edwards sought to answer that exact question. Today the work remains a captivating and awe-inspiring exploration into perhaps the most ultimate question on the planet. Edwards begins the work by distinguishing between a chief end and an ultimate end.

What is the end? For God's own glory. That's the simple answer. Yet Edwards' brilliance is manifested in how he thoroughly argues this point. It made me worship God with an enlarged heart, which is a great benefit. Seeing as it made me glorify God and God's glory is the end for which the world was made, this is a valuable book indeed.
